

posthuman
institute

table of contents

i. introduction

ii. aesthetics

iii. tice. third spaces & social prac

iv. values and tensions

v. collaboration

vi. open-ended design

/^(o.o)^\ /^(o.o)^\ /^(o.o)^\

-+H+--+H+

introduction

posthuman institute exists because in our capitalist system, cultural and technical structures are increasingly failing the audience they claim to serve.

culture is tied to consumption, visibility, or institutional access. technology is framed either as extraction, surveillance, or elite expertise. public space is often unsafe or inaccessible for marginalized communities.

these conditions are not accidental. they are systemic outcomes of optimization, commodification, and individualization.

we do not attempt to “fix” these systems from the outside.

we operate within their cracks,
building shared practices,
infrastructure, and spaces that prioritize care, autonomy, and collective agency.

p o s t h u m a n i s m

describes a shift in perspective, away from the idea of the human as autonomous, sovereign, and self-sufficient. it starts from the assumption that we are always already shaped by bodies, infrastructures, systems, and dependencies.

technology is not treated as a solution. it is something that must be maintained, questioned, and held accountable. its effects are uneven, often invisible, and never neutral.

posthumanism is not anti-human. it rejects the idea of human exceptionalism rather than human presence.

it insists on
relationality,
contingency, and
incompleteness as
conditions of living
and working together.

third spaces & social practice

we focus on the creation of third spaces: environments that exist outside of work, domestic life, and commercial obligation.

many existing cultural spaces have a consumptive or performative incentive. participation often requires money, performance, or social capital. this leaves little room for rest, experimentation, or individuals who do not fit easily into existing frameworks.

these spaces value presence over output. time spent together does not need justification. everyone is free to arrive without a goal, to participate loosely, or simply to exist alongside others.

aesth etics as positi on

we treat aesthetics as a shared language rather than a style. they emerge from subcultures, scenes, and informal networks that develop outside of institutions.

these carry generational memory. traces of early internet cultures, y2k visuals, cringe, tumblr-era fragments, and post-ironic gen-z references are not only nostalgia, but common identity. they point to experiences shaped by platforms, compression, anonymity, and constant online presence.

we approach subculture as a space of recognition. it allows people to find each other without explanation, to signal values, humor, vulnerability, or refusal. imperfection and awkwardness are part of that language.

digital identity is formed through interaction, remixing, and collective interpretation.

current projects

*post-club and experimental rave formats treat nightlife
as a social and aesthetic bonding experience rather
than pure entertainment.
events may be
uncomfortable and
intentionally awkward.*

visual experiments
contrast analogue
hardware and
generative ai as equal,
i m p e r f e c t
c o l l a b o r a t o r s .
projections, feedback
systems, and
a u d i o - m o t i o n
reactivity are used to create unstable visual
environments that shift
in response to sound,
presence, and error.

films may be fragmentary
or situational. poetry may appear as text, sound, or in code. online art is approached as an
interactive space. music
may be
part of a composition
or exists on its own

values & tensions

we are guided by values, but we do not pretend to be free of tension.

freedom, equality, solidarity, and autonomy are not treated as abstract ideals. they are negotiated in practice, shaped by context, relationships, and limits.

we approach technology with both curiosity and caution. optimism about its possibilities exists alongside skepticism toward its impacts. neither position is privileged over the other.

conflict is not understood as failure. it is an expected part of collective work across differences. the aim is not to eliminate disagreement, but to develop ways of engaging with it constructively.

discomfort becomes productive when it is held collectively. when people are supported, listened to, and given room to pause or withdraw, friction can lead to reflection rather than harm.

not all discomfort is acceptable. harm, exclusion, and abuse are not reframed as growth. boundaries matter. mutual-aid is non-negotiable.

within those boundaries, discomfort is allowed to exist. it marks edges, openings, and phases of transition.

collaboration

posthuman institute approaches collaboration as a relationship rather than a structure.

it is not about membership, affiliation, or visibility. it is about working alongside others in ways that respect autonomy, context, and difference.

collaboration can take many forms. it may be temporary or ongoing, formal or informal, visible or quiet. what matters is mutual recognition and the ability to set shared terms.

there is no central curatorial voice and no expectation of alignment on everything. practices, resources, and spaces can be shared without being absorbed or rebranded.

collaboration is understood as a process of exchange: knowledge, care, infrastructure, and attention moving in multiple directions.

open-ended design

posthuman institute is intentionally unfinished.

it does not present a final model or a fixed outcome. it exists as a framework that can shift, adapt, and respond to the people and contexts that shape it.

this openness is not uncertainty for its own sake. it is a commitment to remaining responsive, accountable, and in motion.

what matters is not completeness, but continuity. the ability to learn, to revise, and to make room for what has not yet emerged.

WITH THANKS

